Community Investment Volunteer

How would you like to help give away millions of dollars?

You probably knew that community volunteers help raise money, but did you know that volunteers make the decisions in how to invest it as well? Volunteers serve between 25 – 30 hours a year visiting programs, learning about health & human service issues, and reviewing funding requests from community organizations. They are trained by United Way professionals and provided the tools they need to do their job.

Former Community Investment volunteers have told us...

“Serving as a community investment volunteer is the best way to become more familiar with United Way and what it does for our community. You get first hand knowledge of its operations and you see your dollars at work.”

“I can’t imagine living in a community without United Way. They’ve shown me what we can accomplish when business, government and nonprofits work together for the greater good.”
